Basically a "fruit ninja" type of game in VR. However, it's ultimately ridiculously simple, and has almost no replayability. For the asking price ($9.99), you won't feel like you got your money's worth. If the price dropped to a couple bucks, I'd guess mostly people wouldn't mind playing it for 10 minutes every week or so and padding out their VR library.. not bad game. This game is very similar to fruit ninja, but its done candy instead. The game works well and its still very much fun. There is room for improvements to make this game better and different if people would offer some constructive critacism. Nothing wrong with competion, which might make these games better.. I played this on the Oculus Rift with Touch controllers .. and it works, sort of. But it's still not a fun game. It's not even a good Fruit Ninja clone (which is what I was hoping for). I wanted to like this game. It's just bad though, even at the sale price of .99 cents.

In case you're wondering, if you start game from Steam directly, it will work on Oculus. However, if you start game directly from Steam VR, it will start upside down.

When the game did work, the fruit\/candy would come at me very slow, like slow motion. No challenge in cutting them up with candy canes. On top of that, there were hit detection issues. Randomly, I would hit the fruit right down the middle with my candy cane and nothing would register. This happened randomly about 10-20% of the time.

Rating 2\/10. Good visuals, nice VR environment, but terrible gameplay, not even a good clone :(I can't recommend this game free or at .99 cents until it is fixed
