Brushes Brushes are one of the most popular tools in Photoshop. They can be used for various effects, including compositing, painting, erasing and retouching images. Brushes are simply different patterns or shapes of paint that you can use to paint objects. There are several different brush types: Brushes are a common tool in Photoshop. Here, a brush with a stroke is selected (no color palette; just a brush with a stroke). Image Courtesy of Adobe Systems Inc. You can adjust the size, thickness, roundness, tip, and hardness of a brush by clicking the Brush Tool Options menu. One way to paint is to select a Brush tool and click and drag on the canvas. You can also double-click the Brush tool. Once you have it in position, hold down the shift key and click to select the parts of the image you want to paint. You can then paint over the image with that brush. As you work, you can also change the brush size, type, color, and hardness. To select a brush, click on the Brush tool Options menu and select a brush from the Brush Type list. You can also press the F key to get to that menu. To change a brush to a new size, select the Brush tool and press Enter. Then, from the Size menu, choose a new brush size. To select a brush color, click on a color well in the Colors panel. To change the color, simply select a color with the Color Picker or double-click to select a color. To change the brush type, go to the Brush Type menu. Click the main Brush Type icon. The menu is split into two sections. The active brush is the primary brush for painting with a new layer. The secondary brush is the current brush for painting. You can change the current brush by selecting the secondary brush icon in the Brush Type menu. You can paint with a new layer using either the paint bucket or the brush. There are two types of paint layers. The paint bucket is a new layer. You can create a new paint layer by pressing Ctrl+N on the keyboard. Paint is applied to the new layer. To paint using a new brush, you must use a different paint layer. To create a new paint layer, press Shift+Ctrl+N to create a new layer. You can create more than one paint layer by holding down the Ctrl key. This
